While not much has run off. The water has soaked into the ground, and thus there is a prospect of its reaching the underground streams and starting them up again. The new moon the other night showed the lower horn of its creacent well up, indicating a wet-moon, so, perhaps, there may be a sufficiency of rainfall within the next few weeks.

La grippe has not caught any of our people yet; some persons are suffering from coids, but none of the afflicted ones are seriously sick.

In consequence of the indisposition of the teacher (Miss Bowles), the public school has been closed until Monday.

It is contemplated by the pupils to have a pound-party at the school house to-morrow night. All are expected to take with them a pound of candy.

Mr. F. D. Stegeri who owns a beautiful summer residence here, spent an after-neon recently looking over his place. Mr. B. F. Johnson comes up here oc-delivered a neat and attractive address on "Southern Character," paying especial attention to the lives of our great Lee and Stonewall Jackson. The Doctor's address was well received and loudly applauded.

The choir then sang "Dixle," which especially enthused the old vets., and after this Dr. Moneure then introduced S. O. Bland, of Gloucester.

MR. BLAND'S SPEECH.

The young speaker began his address by explaining from his standpoint the formation of our Federal Union, and claimed the reserved rights of the States. He told in a graceful manner of the struggle of the southern people for their rights, and declared "that the southern soldier has nothing for which to apologize." He paid a glowing tribute to the genius of Lee and Jackson, and confidued his address by repeating one of Father Ryan's poems, which elicited loud applause.

At the conclusion of the address the

At the conclusion of the address the chorus sarg "My Maryland," which carried the vast audience by storm. The commander then announced the entertainment at an end, and the audience dispersed, and the camp and invited guests repaired to their dining-hall to partake of a delightful repast.

Mr. J. B. Moore, who comes here during the summer, is contemplating an addition to his house, and fixing it up for use during the winter.

A lot for the erection of an Episco-pair church has been secured in a very edigible locality here, and I presume that the church will be erected during the years. There are several families of that denomination residing here, and during the summer services are held by visiting ministers, about once a month. Rev. Mr. Clopton or Rev. Mr. Down-man have usually officiated.

How Ellen Terry Gave Her One Shilling to a Shivering Woman. Ellen Terry's kindness and beauty of nature are proverbial. But I cannot help ringing to light a little incident which | England, to which fact is due the very I remember many years ago, says a slow advance of the storm. The area of writer in the "Lady's Pictorial." I was writer in the "Lady's Pictorial." I was walking with her in a very poor part of Bristol, when she could not have been more than three or four and twenty, and in her arms she carried a baby a few weeks old. She was desperately tired, and, as it was raining a cold, sheet drizzle, she suggested taking a cab home, adding. "I have but I shilling with me, which will answer our purpose. At that moment a very poorly-clad woman pressed us to buy her violets. I had no money out with me, and Ellen Terry, with her quick and ready sympathy, alwith her quick and ready sympathy, al-ways oblivious of self, exclaimed to ways oblivious of self, exclaimed to me:

"I am so freezing myself, even in this thick shawl, that poor woman must be nearly dead." whereupon she flew into a small woollen draper's, spent her remaining shilling upon a knitted crossover, and with the utmost simplicity tied it over the poor, shivering beggar. St. Martin himself could hardly have divided his clook with more grace. I can see her now as she was then—a fair, slight girl, her beautiful eyes expressive of the utmost happiness in the happiness of the poor woman, as, forgetful of her own weariness (she had just recovered from a long illness), she walked, her baby pressed to her breast, her three miles on that cold, February evening, never uttering a word of complaint or regret that she had lost her lift in the cab.
